BASE BALL BRIEFS.

Pat Moran is one of the world's greatest diplomats. He made a lot of ball players believe they were human beings and they acted as such.

Though he is a colossus with the mallet, Crawford was a feeble stick swinger in Bostan this year. Sam's batting average for the eleven games at Fenway Park slumped to the ema-clated percentage of .163.

This one is told of a big league mag-nate whose club has been very much in the running this year. His team was on the way north from the training trip. It was booked for exhibition games with the Griffmen in Washing-ton. It rained the first day. Said the magnate to his manager that night: "Do we play a double-header tomor-row?"

Charley Dooin, as is known, has put in several winters as a disciple of Thespis. He really has a splendid voice, and for other purposes, too, than debating with umpires. Once upon a time while awaiting his turn in the wings another vaudevillian—this one was a vaudevillianess—passed the time of day with hm. "You know," she said. "I hardly ever speak to actors," "But I'm not an actor," answered Charles. "I know it," was the reply.

A certain press syndicate that daily sends out some weird stories about base bail devotes a column to discussion of what players will get the Chalmers automobiles this season, its "expert" evidently not having heard that the awards were discontinued with the presentation of last year's cars.

Worcester players, who took the re-

Worcester players, who took the receipts of games for the final two weeks of the New England League season, did not get enquiph at the gate to pay their salaries is full, and they have put the case up to Secretary Farrell. Looks like the only thing to do is declare them free agents or have the league dispose of their services and apply sale money on account.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PARK, Philadelphia, October 8.—The playing field for the first game of the world series was in miserable condition, it being thoroughly soaked in all but a few spots near the bases. As early as I o'clock the available seats were filled.

The Red Sox took their batting practice at 1:20 o'clock, and they seemed to put more spirit into eir work than was displayed by the National League champions.

During the Phillies' batting practice several balls were hit into the left-field seats.

Speaker hit the right-field fence twice in succession the first time up on his practice. McCabe did the pitching to the Boston batter, in practice. Manager Carrigan stationed himself ehind the practice pitcher and closely scrutinize I the actions of his players as they batted. Both Pitchers Foster and Shore took part in the batting practice.

Luderus grounded to Barry and Cravath stalled him long enough to allow Luderus to reach the bag while he was being retired by Barry. Shore also walked Whitted, but he struck out Niehoff without much trouble. Scott got the third hit off Alexander in the third linning when, after Shore and Hooper had been retired, he singled to center. Speaker, however, offered an easy chance for Whitted in left.

The first hit made off Shore was produced by Alexander, who, w th one out in the third, hit a high bounder between third and short which Gardner between third and short which Gardner could not handle; but Shore showed no force Alexander. Bancroft rolled to Barry.

Up to the fourth inning Alexander had failed to retire the Sox in order. In each with Gardner being the one to make a hit, Gardner being the one to make a single with two out in the fourth. On the hit and run play, Barry filed to Cravath. The first run of the game came to the Phillies in the fourth as the result of two scratch hits. William R. Armour, after many years of activity in base ball as magnate and manager, declares he has done with the game and expects to devote his time henceforth to his saloon in Kansas City. In his time Armour has managed two major league clubs—Detroit and Cleveland—and several American Association clubs, besides filling other official positions. His last position was manager of the Kansas City Blues, heing succeeded in that early in the present season by Danny Shay.
